What is the difference between Masago and Tobikko?

MASAGO (direct translation from Japanese meaning "fine/small sand") is generally eggs from Capelin, which is about 1mm in size.

They have a crunchier texture and can be cooked in dishes like Pasta or Fried Rice.

TOBIKKO (direct translation from Japanese meaning Tobu/Flying + Ko/Child) is specifically eggs from Flying Fish, which is about 2mm in size. They have a brilliant gem-like appearance, and are recommended for cold garnish.

Molecular Alignment System (MAS)

- How M.A.S. Works -

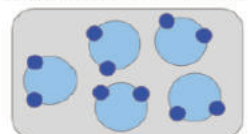

Regular Freezer

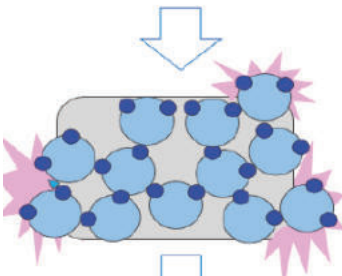

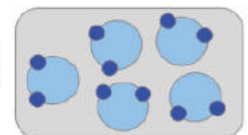

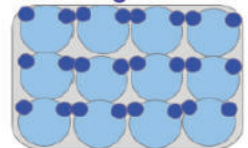

Food Cell

Freezing

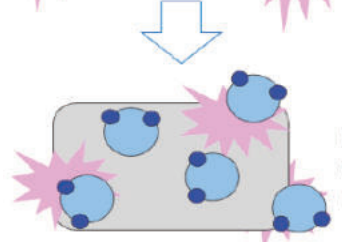

MAS Freezer

Electromagnetic Wave

When molecules freeze, their volume increases damaging the outer cell membrane.

Moisture and nutrients escape through the cell membrane. (DRIP)

Defrosting

Electromagnetic wave forces gently sway the individual molecules and keep them aligned.

Water molecules remain the same size preventing damage to the delicate cell membrane.
